annular plate that is movably connected to the housing and a second annular plate, which is rotatable relative to the first annular plate about a support element, and which contains at least one fluid duct between the first and second annular plates. Such a vane fluid control valve is known from European Patent Application EP 0 695 214 A2. The known vane fluid control valve includes a hollow housing with a control housing, which accommodates the rotatable second annular plate, and a rotatable first annular plate, which can be connected to the hollow housing by a bearing. The hollow housing includes a first passage, which is connected to the fluid duct between the first annular plate and the control housing. The hollow housing is connected to a tube, which has at least one fluid duct connected to a fluid feed line. The hollow housing is manufactured from plastic. In order to seal the housing, a sealing member made of an elastomeric material is provided on the hollow housing, which is arranged between the hollow housing and the first annular plate in the hollow chamber of the housing.
